Every time you publish a photograph or write a story on a building, it is important that you credit the architect. Architects need to be recognized for their designs. They spend years working to create a building. This effort and authorship deserves recognition in your article about their work.

As you include the name of the fashion designer when writing about an article of clothing or the director when discussing a film, the architect's name should be included when reporting on a building.

The architect is the expert on the design and can serve as a great resource for you!

Remember “every building has an architect” and everyone deserves to know who that architect is!
